Yeshiva U. Is Under N.Y. State Survey For Irregular Practices As To Doctorates

The New York State Education Department in Albany has cracked down on the Graduate School of Education at Yeshiva University, in New York City, because of questionable academic practices in its doctoral programs. The department has been "surveying" the school for more than three months and intensified its investigations in March at the request of Dr. Samuel Belkin, president of Yeshiva University, reports the New York Herald Tribune. The department has ruled that the Yeshiva education school — now three years old — can grant no doctoral degrees this June unless the records of all doctoral candidates have been examined at the department in Albany.

Effective immediately, the department has also ruled, no student or graduate of Yeshiva's education school may be certified for any licensed professional position in the state's public schools by Yeshiva, but instead must send his transcripts to Albany for evaluation by the education department's Bureau of Teacher Education and Certification.

Dr. Belkin received a letter from Dr. Frank R. Kille, associate commissioner for higher and professional education, requesting "additions to and possibly changes in the administrative staff" of the school. Dr. Kille stressed in his letter that only the doctoral programs in the School of Education are under fire, and not any of the Yeshiva University's programs in its sixteen other schools and divisions.

Among the Yeshiva practices discussed in the letter are an insufficient number of full-time faculty members, too rapid expansion of the school, lack of checking on doctoral candidates as they progress toward their degrees, and the arrangement whereby doctoral candidates took courses from one another.

In an interview, Dr. Belkin told the New York Herald Tribune "there are going to be changes in the administration." Asked whether this meant that Benjamin Fine, dean of the education school, would resign, Dr. Belkin said: "I would prefer not to make a statement on Dr. Fine right now."

Dr. Fine, former education editor of "The New York Times," was asked to confirm rumors in the academic world that he had resigned or was going to. He replied in an interview at the school, 110 W. 57th Street: "I have not resigned. This is entirely up to the president."

Dr. Kille's letter stipulated that certain requirements must be met by the school before July 1, when registrations of its present programs expire. He added that the state's "survey" of the school will continue, and that for the time being programs of study will be approved only on a year-to-year basis.

High on the list of priorities for correcting the questionable practices was the proviso that the school should not expand the number of its students further. Since the summer of 1957, when the first sessions were held, the graduate school has jumped in enrollment from 85 to 1,330 in this spring semester. Staff members in the State Education Department say that it is "extremely rare" for a graduate school to expand this rapidly.

Dr. Kille's letter also specified that a greater portion of the school's instruction should be offered by full-time faculty. The present full-time faculty is forty-eight, while seventy-four are part-time, according to the State Education Department.

Dr. Fine said that when he became dean March 1, 1958, there were five full-time faculty and fifty part-time faculty members. At present, he said, there are forty full-time members and eighty-five part-timers. The figures do not agree with those recorded by the State Education Department staff.

Dr. Fine said he has been "working weekly, almost daily" to strengthen the faculty, and that he hoped by September to have fifty full-time and fifty part-time faculty members.

Dr. Kille also said in his letter that "it will be unnecessary to repeat earlier arrangements whereby doctoral candidates were students in their colleagues' classes."

Dr. Belkin told the New York Herald Tribune that such practices had occurred in the early days of the school, but "do not exist today." "I personally believe in high standards in all branches of the university," he said. "I have gone through much self criticism. We have tried to do everything possible to strengthen the school."

Rumors of irregular practices at the Yeshiva education school began to reach Albany last May. In December, Dr. Myron Lieberman, professor of education at the school, who has since resigned, made charges of inadequate full-time faculty and mass enrollment available to the State Education Department. He had previously circulated them in a memo to the trustees last July. Dr. Lieberman also charged that standards for admission were low, and that student colleagues had taken one another's classes for credit.

Dr. Kille, reached by telephone in Potsdam, N. Y., where he was visiting Clarkson College of Technology, said that as a result of Dr. Lieberman's charges and increasing rumors, the department had become "increasingly concerned" with "academic standards on the campus and with many things which did not make for maximum strength in the school."

Dr. Lieberman, who is now director of basic research for the Educational Research Council of Greater Cleveland, says the New York Herald Tribune, stressed in his memo that his purpose was "to help the trustees and to advance the cause of Judaism and higher education."

Among the requirements which Dr. Kille said must be met by the Yeshiva school before July 1 were these:

1. Additions or possibly changes in the administrative staff "to bring about increased confidence in the academic leadership of the school." Dr. Belkin said he will bring in "distinguished academicians."

2. To bring and keep doctoral records up to date and to evaluate transfer credits more carefully. Dr. Belkin said this is being done.

3. "Committees responsible for passing on doctoral programs will be composed of persons who hold earned degrees in the appropriate fields."

4. Doctoral candidates to be checked more consistently, and a more organized program of study for the doctorate to be set up; also, "a more clearly defined set of standards for comprehensive and other examinations" and "a clearer understanding as to the nature and extent of the required theses or doctoral projects."

Dr. Kille also wrote that "a progress report from you on these various requests will be expected by July 1, 1960."

The Yeshiva Graduate School of Education offers a doctorate in education, a doctorate of philosophy, a master of science, and a master of religious education. Dr. Kille stressed that the department was especially anxious about the doctorates in education, as well as the Ph.D. The other programs are satisfactory, he said.

Dr. Fine joined "The New York Times" in 1937 and became its first full-time education editor in 1941, says the New York Herald Tribune. He resigned in 1958 to become dean of the Yeshiva graduate school.

Dr. Fine said that a new program, introduced last November, requires candidates to meet rigid standards and involves about four years of study reports the New York Times. Only about six doctoral degrees, he said, were scheduled to be awarded this June. Since its founding, the school has conferred a total of thirty-seven doctorates.

From other sources it was learned that the school had sought a five-year grant of $250,000 from the Ford Foundation to carry out this program. Foundation officials said that they had turned down the bid, and indicated that they

U. S. Jews Get One Top Job For 30 To Christians

Opportunities for Jews in top economic positions have been "drastically limited compared with their Christian fellow students of equivalent scholastic levels," according to the executive head of the American Jewish Committee. Dr. John Slawson, executive vice-president of the Committee, added that, as a result, "discriminatory barriers are preventing major American industries and financial institutions from utilizing fully a substantial portion of the United States manpower resources."

Dr. Slawson discussed a survey the Committee had made of an Eastern university business school, covering a thirty-year period, at the agency's annual meeting at the Institute of Human Relations, 165 East Fifty-sixth Street, New York.

The survey indicated, he said, that Christian graduates of the university's business school, "who have found executive employment in major American industry proportionately out-number their fellow Jewish graduates in these positions by more than 30 to one."

The survey covered such industries as insurance, banking, petroleum, steel, drugs, chemicals, and automobile. It showed that the strongest barriers to employment of Jews on the executive level appeared to exist in banking and insurance. The survey covered 15,000 students who had been graduated with master's degrees in business administration. The university was not identified.

Dr. Slawson reported that in major American industries Jewish personnel constituted about one-half of one per cent of the management executives. The 30-to-one ratio was based on an examination of proportionately equivalent samples of Christian and Jewish students.

He contended that this situation "exists despite the fact that discriminatory barriers against Jews in elite colleges have been crumbling during the past decade." He also pointed out that about 8 per cent of the college-trained population "is Jewish, and that managerial staffs are chosen almost exclusively from the ranks of college graduates."

He urged American industry to "catch up with the tremendous strides which our colleges have made against the artificial restrictions which prevent the most effective use of our human resources."

The agency also made public another report, based on more than 1,200 news and editorial items in its European offices, that showed that the majority of the European was expressing "grave concern at the failure of education for democracy in West Germany and the breakdown of its denazification process."

U. S. Deplores Picket Action On Cairo Vessel At N. Y.; Seamen's Head Denies Zionist Pressure

The head of the Seafarers International Union told President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic that the picketing of an Egyptian ship at New York was a trade union action based on Cairo's denial of freedom of the seas to many United States ships.

Paul Hall, the Union's president, in a cablegram to Mr. Nasser, vigorously denied reports prevalent in Cairo and other Arab capitals that the picketing of the cargo ship Cleopatra was a result of "so-called Zionist pressure", reports the New York Times. Mr. Hall said his Union's action was designed to protect the welfare and security of S. I. U. members and to emphasize the Union's insistence upon observance of international law allowing full freedom of the seas.

Cairo has been denying passage through the Suez Canal for ships carrying Israeli cargoes and has been blacklisting vessels that have touched at Israeli ports.

Reports from the Middle East indicated that retaliatory measures were being taken by maritime labor in both the Syrian and Egyptian regions of the United Arab Republic against the picketing at New York. Mr. Hall's message was sent in reply to protest messages received from Arab labor unions. A copy of his message was sent to the International Confederation of Arab Trade Unions in Cairo.

Meanwhile, the S. I. U. reported that it had received support from Omer Becu, secretary general of the International Transport Workers Federation in Brussels, Belgium, who called the picketing of the Cleopatra "justified" and commended American maritime unions.

The S. I. U. was being supported by the International Longshoremen's Association, whose members were honoring the picket line.

Mr. Hall declared the protest was not aimed at Arab seamen or Arab trade unionists. He added that the 103-man crew of the Cleopatra had full freedom at New York and that food and medical supplies were going aboard the vessel.

He said that, in contrast, S.I.U. members had been mistreated while passing through the Suez Canal, according to the New York Times. He also told Mr. Nasser that many S. I. U. members had lost jobs because the United Arab Republic had refused to permit certain United States ships to carry cargo to and from Middle East ports.

The Seafarers International Union charged that the U.S. Government's failure to combat the blacklisting of American ships by the United Arab Republic had forced union picketing of the Cleopatra.

In a sharply worded statement Paul Hall, the union's president, said his union and the International Longshoremen's Association had decided to picket the vessel "only after other efforts to obtain relief for American-flag vessels and crews involved had been unsuccessful."

Both unions have been demonstrating against the Cleopatra since April 13 in a protest over the loss of job opportunities arising from the blacklisting of ships that had traded with Israel or called at Israeli ports.

Replying to State Department statements that the picketing was "embarrassing" United States foreign relations and might result in reprisals against American ships, Mr. Hall declared: "Beyond expressing disapproval of the boycott, the United States Government has taken no effective action to protect the American flag in international trade."

Mr. Hall said the situation became acute a month ago, when crews of three vessels under contract to the union were "abused, mistreated and held virtual prisoners" in Egyptian ports. The threatened boycott of United States-flag ships by Arab nations, he said, was not a reaction to the seamen's moves but an extension of Arab policy of interference with freedom of the seas.

The U.S. State Department said that the picketing of the Egyptian ship Cleopatra by seamen in New York was "embarrassing" the conduct of United States foreign relations.

The State Department expressed concern that if the picketing became "protracted" there would be widespread reprisal action against United States-flag vessels by labor unions in Arab countries.

The 8,193-gross-ton Cleopatra, owned by the Alexandria, United Arab Republic, arrived at Pier 18, East River, from Mediterranean ports April 13, says the New York Times. Immediately the Seafarers International Union put pickets at the ship. Members of the International Longshoremen's Association refused to unload her.

The seamen's union said it was acting in protest against the boycott by Arab countries of ships that had traded with Israel or called at Israeli ports. The United Arab Republic has barred such ships from its ports and from transit through the Suez Canal.

Representatives of the ship's owners and the United Arab Republic protested that the picketing was for a "political" purpose and that no legitimate labor dispute was involved.

Paul Hall, president of the seamen's union, insisted that many United States seamen had lost jobs because of the Arab boycott.

In a statement the State Department said it recognized the right of Americans to free speech and "the special status to labor union picketing in labor disputes." The department said it also understood the union's position that the Arab boycott was "discriminatory against American shipping and seamen."

"From the foreign policy standpoint, however, it should be made clear that the picketing is regarded abroad as a political demonstration related to the United Arab restrictions against Israel," the statement continued, says the New York Times. "The United States Government has repeatedly emphasized that it does not condone the Arab boycott, which is one of the many unfortunate outgrowths of the whole Palestine situation.

"However, with such complex questions involved, an effort by a private group to apply pressure publicly with a view to bringing about shifts in the policies of foreign governments is, of course, embarrassing to the conduct of our Government's foreign relations and may have unfortunate consequences."

Asked to specify what these consequences might be, a State Department spokesman observed that unions in the Middle East were contemplating widespread reprisal action against United States-flag vessels if the New York picketing continued.

"We would hope that the situation would not proceed to the point at which there would be strong counter-action against American shipping and American seamen in foreign ports," the spokesmen said.

Dispatches from Lebanon said Syrian dockworkers had refused to unload two United States cargo vessels in Latakia or to load two American tankers at Baniyas.

United States Ambassador G. Frederick Reinhart discussed the Cleopatra case at the Foreign Office of the United Arab Republic in Cairo. Mr. Reinhart's visits reflected growing concern at the Government level over angry reactions in Cairo to the picketing of the U. A. R. freighter in New York.

It was understood, however, that Mr. Reinhart pointed out on both occasions that the United States Government had no legal means of approaching the problem created by the incident except through the courts and the courts took time. The Ambassador was said to have reminded the Arab officials that in last year's steel strike not even the President of the United States could take swift action.

It was assumed the United States envoy strove to dissipate the prevailing notion in Cairo that Washington supported the picketing of the Cleopatra, if, indeed, it was not responsible for it, reports the New York Times. This sentiment was reflected in the attitude of one Arab source. He said the United States Government, if it wanted to, could order the Navy or the Coast Guard to unload the Cleopatra.

The Government-controlled newspaper Al Goumhouria said: "The West, in the misguided bid to engage in an anti-Arab move at Israel's instigation, is adding another blunder to its series."

The widely read paper, Al Ahram, said the New York dock workers were "blind tools in Israel's services." Their action, it declared, should be "the business of the country that permits its

This year has been designated by the Zionist Movement as "Herzl Year" in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of the founder of modern Zionism. The 24th World Zionist Congress which will convene in Jerusalem in December 1960 will be known as the Herzl Congress.

The Shekel will this year be known as the Herzl Shekel. A Central Shekel Board has been established in Canada on which are represented all Zionist groups entitled to such representation in terms of the constitution of the World Zionist Movement, and the Herzl Shekel will be available across Canada from 1st May to 15th June, 1960. The cost is thirty five cents.

Every Jew or Jewess over 18 is eligible for the shekel and is urged to obtain one and thus identify himself or herself with the Herzl Congress in Jerusalem. The shekel is the traditional symbol of affiliation with the Zionist Movement, and also confers the official franchise.

Wife Of The Israeli Envoy To U.S. Is The First Honorary Member Of B. B. W.

Mrs. Avraham Harman, wife of the Israeli Ambassador to the U.S., has become the first honorary member of Bnai Brith Women in the 51-year history of the national Jewish women's service organization. She received this honor following her address on human rights to the B.B.W. executive board convened in Washington, D.C. for its semi-annual meeting. In 1943, when B.B.W. founded its Children's Home for emotionally disturbed youngsters in Israel, Mrs. Harman served on its board of directors. She was then head of the Children's Section of Jerusalem's Social Welfare Services, one of many agencies which refer youngsters to B.B.W.'s modern residential treatment center.

Her speech to the executive board called for recognition of the "basic needs of people everywhere" and placed the hope of world progress in the laps of leaders whose attitudes toward human welfare "hold the key to peace." She said the Declaration of Human Rights formulated by the United Nations in 1948 "represented a fundamental change in attitude and philosophy toward people in under-developed countries."

"Each year a little bit of progress is made everywhere," Mrs. Harman stated. "We should try not to be cynical or skeptical." She added it is "very difficult" for some UN representatives to understand the intrinsic meaning of democracy and to apply it to the legislative operations of their own governments. "Seated at the UN council tables are Communists, representatives of nations with military dictatorships, and delegates from countries which function as feudal societies," the speaker pointed out. "Democracy is an alien concept to them. Nevertheless, the constitutions of several newer countries contain direct passages of the Human Rights Declaration to be implemented as the nations grow."

Mrs. Harman, born in London, and a graduate of the London School of Economics and Political Science, was a member of the Permanent Delegation of Israel to the UN. She was also an alternate of the Israel Delegation to the UN General Assembly. The Jewish people reflect a "magnificent tradition of philanthropy," she said, "based on warm humanitarianism and the excruciating pain of their own suffering in the past and present. They understand what it means to have a social conscience."

Shortly before Mrs. Harman's appearance, the B.B.W. executive board voted to finance a $180,000 program to expand its Children's Home. A new school and dormitory cottage will be constructed on the Home grounds in B'ait Vegan, Israel. Disturbed youngsters, ages seven to 13, receive psychiatric care, specialized schooling, and individual attention at the Home, the only one of its kind in Israel serving the particular age group.

own interests to be affected by certain currents detrimental to its own interests." The picketing in New York was assailed as "a hostile action directed against the U. A. R." and as a "provocation" against Arab nationalism.

had advised the school not to embark on the program because it was their opinion that the school was not yet ready for such an undertaking.

The school is best known for its teacher internship program, which prepares liberal arts college graduates for teaching positions through on-the-job experience and classroom study. The project is supported by a five-year grant of $500,000 from the Ford Foundation.

Dr. Alvin C. Eurich, vice-president of the Foundation, said, "We have been looking at the Yeshiva program for some time and we have had the state department look at it, too. Everything we have checked as far as the internship program is concerned looked good. We found that both the people in it and the supervision were good."

Dr. Samuel Belkin, president of the university, acknowledged that the school could be strengthened in some areas. But he defended its general standards and operations. Officials of the State Education Department and of the Ford Foundation, which has granted the school $500,000 to support a teaching fellowship program, made similar comments.

Dr. Belkin said that the university would search for an outstanding educator and administrator to be dean of the school. Dr. Benjamin Fine, the dean who resigned, had held the post since March 1, 1958. Dr. Fine said that he had wanted for several months to leave the academic post to write, says the New York Times. He said that he was resigning at this time because he wanted to spare Dr. Belkin and the university any possible embarrassment. Dr. Fine had been a columnist while at Yeshiva and was formerly education editor of The New York Times.

The Evening Of Life

BY EDWIN SAMUEL

Retirement should be wonderful: a broad and shady plateau where, at last, you have room to do everything you missed when you were too busy. All those books you intended to read; all those places you wanted to visit and are still vigorous enough to enjoy. In fact, you have in front of you a perpetual holiday.

This is how my dear old friend and colleague Victor felt when he was retired from the Palestine Administration in 1948 at the end of the Mandate. I never knew Victor really well in the early days. He worked for thirty years in Jaffa; I was most of the time in Jerusalem. When I came down, every fortnight or so, to inspect the immigration sub-office in Jaffa, it was a relief to enter the cool vaults of the Governorate after the noisy, dusty streets of Jaffa, teeming with Arabs in perpetual motion.

I used to pass Victor as he sat in the next set of rooms to ours, his office door forever open to what he proudly called "my clients". By then, Victor was the Treasury Sub-Accountant for the Jaffa District. He received taxes: he took all our immigration and passport fees and paid out all our staff salaries. He sat alone in a large whitewashed room, behind a polished yellow wooden desk with pedestals of drawers on either side (a standard Public Works issue to all of us senior civil servants).

Victor was stout and florid, then in his late fifties, always neatly dressed in a dark suit and tie, his jacket on, even at noon of the stickiest Jaffa summer day. Although baldness was creeping up the back of his head, he hid it by wearing his silvery hair brushed straight back from his forehead without any parting and keeping it long and heavily oiled. He would look up at me with clear blue eyes as he saw me pop my head in as I passed his room on my arrival each fortnight. "How goes it, Victor?" I would say and Victor invariably would reply: "Not so dusty."

Victor Fox, like several others of us, belonged to that small group of English-born Jews in Allenby's army whom World War I had accidentally washed up on the strange shores of Palestine. After the war was over, we all stayed on in the new civil administration. In those early days, English Jews were at a premium in Palestine — a link between the top British colonial administrators and the local Jewish population, few of whom understood any English at all. Later, when many of the Jewish population had learnt English, and Arab nationalists refused to be governed even by English Jews, we became an embarrassment to the Mandatory Government.

But, in the 1920's, Victor fitted into the picture particularly well; for he knew Yiddish from childhood, whereas I didn't, and that acquisition was useful with all the Jewish immigrants who had come to Palestine from Eastern Europe. Victor had been born in London. His father was Abraham Fuchs, a Galician tailor who had settled in Whitechapel in the 1880's. Victor had originally been called Avigdor Fuchs. He'd had the usual career for a bright Whitechapel boy — the Jews' Free School, and then a job as an accountant in a big textile factory.

By the age of twenty-five he had changed his name from Avigdor Fuchs to Victor Fox and had married Ruth Golub, also from Whitechapel. Ruth was five years older than Victor; but her plainness was offset by a good dowry and, by the time Pamela was born in 1910, Victor was well-established in a nice little house at Ealing, travelling daily in and out of the city. Then came the war.

Victor was already forty-one and pushed not unwillingly into the Royal Army Service Corps. In 1916, he was posted to the Cairo Base Depot. Two years later, after Southern Palestine had been liberated by the British Forces, Victor found himself at Jaffa in a makeshift office over an old musty warehouse in the so-called "port," which in reality was nothing more than a lighter-basin protected by a rocky reef out at sea, beyond which stood the naval transports bringing military supplies. Victor's job was to check these incoming stores and enter them in his neat ledgers before they were warehoused. Later, they would go up by lorry to the front, ten miles to the north.

Jaffa town in those days was squalid and picturesque. But the stench from the alley-corners used as public privies was largely swept away by the fresh sea breezes. The port area itself was always airy: the dancing blue sea was an everlasting attraction to city-born Victor, as he looked out of the narrow, barred windows of his "office," cut through the stone walls a yard thick.

Most evenings Victor would wander from his army billet in Jaffa northwards to the little white suburb of Tel Aviv where the Jews lived. The small, one-storey houses were separated from the broad street by dried-up gardens, protected by unpainted and broken-down wooden fences. Victor got to know several families in Tel Aviv: they were good to him. Thirty years later, Victor was still there. For, although he had never been a Zionist, and cared little about public affairs in general, several of the older merchants in Tel Aviv were only too willing to offer him a job when the war should have ended.

"Why not work for us?" they said. Victor's Yiddish had proved to be the stepping-stone to a smattering of Hebrew, which was as far as Victor ever got. So, after the Armistice in the winter of 1918, when everyone was waiting to be sent home for demobilisation, Victor decided to stay behind in Palestine.

An official circular from O.E.T.A. (the Occupied Enemy Territory Administration) came round Victor's office. It called for civilian clerks and accountants, from among the British troops, to work for the new military administration of Palestine. Qualified accountants were scarce: the pay was good: Victor had always longed to live for a while in foreign parts. He wanted to see the rest of Palestine in peace time (though he never quite managed to do so).

His work at Jaffa port had been exemplary: for he was a good man with a ledger and his handwriting, if undistinguished, was clear and bold: it seemed to say "here is an honest man". So Victor joined the Occupied Enemy Territory Administration as a civilian accountant in the Treasury.

Some months later, Ruth came out and joined him, although Pamela, now nine, remained behind in London at school. An Arab house was requisitioned for Victor in the Ajami quarter, one of the pleasanter suburbs to the south of the Old City and port of Jaffa. The house was perched on the cliffs with a palm tree in the little garden and flower beds neatly edged with beer bottles.

They bought some furniture in the German Colony and settled in: or, rather, Victor settled in; for, after a few months, Ruth decided that she couldn't stand the summer humidity of Jaffa. I don't blame her: by July, if you walk more than a few steps in Jaffa, you break out in a sweat: even sleeping at night is a problem. You wake up with the sheets sopping.

So Ruth began to spend every spring and summer in London, with her aged parents, in order to be near Pamela. Victor grew accustomed to living alone for much of the year. By the time I got to know him in the 1930's, I made it a practice, partly out of pity for his loneliness, to drop in on the evenings when I came down to Jaffa for a quiet rubber of bridge. Our usual companions were the Jenkins, a British army officer and his wife, who lived next door to Victor. They were a nice, quiet, inoffensive, elderly couple.

Victor was an odd fish. We'd all got accustomed by then to interspersing Arabic and Hebrew slang in our conversation at the bridge table; the Hebrew mazal tov ("congratulations") if anyone won with a big score; or the Arabic al hamdul illah ("may God be praised") if one got out of a mess; or mafeish ("never mind") if one didn't. But not Victor: he invariably spoke with a pedantically pure English.

"My dear Sir," he'd say when Jenkins swore with a rich army vocabulary, "that is no way in which to use the English language. It is our heritage. We must set an example in this country." But that was because poor Victor felt himself suspended in Palestine halfway between the British overlords and the "native" population. Like me, Victor belonged to the Jewish Community of Palestine — the Yishuv: but we were not of it. We were also overlords.

It was for that reason that Victor never even attempted to write in Hebrew, though he could by now speak it fairly fluently. When I asked him why, he replied, "I do not wish to expose the childishness of my handwriting." For him it was a matter of acute embarrassment and, in time, became almost a complex with him.

During the year that I, too worked at Jaffa in the District Administration, I saw rather more of Victor, even though my wife and I lived in Tel Aviv and not in Jaffa (my wife had grown up in Tel Aviv as a girl and I'd married into it). Ruth and Pamela — now a buxom young lady — came out to join Victor for Pamela's Easter holidays and, although Pamela was much older than my own children, we often used to arrange to meet on the Jaffa beach, where the crowds were less than at Tel Aviv.

There were rocks, too, at Jaffa, out at sea, spiky to the feet but good to dive from. They made swimming more interesting, even for Victor, in his absurd two-piece bathing dress with a white top to which he clung long after all the other men had been converted to swimming trunks.

ISRAEL SEEKS TO PROMOTE TOURISM FROM CANADA

As from April 1, 1960, holders of Canadian passports need not apply for visas at Israel Consular Offices in Canada or elsewhere, but will receive their visitor's visa at the port of entry in Israel. This is the latest measure taken by the Government of Israel to promote tourism from Canada to Israel. The visa will be issued free of charges. However, as in the past, holders of Certificates of identity issued by the Government of Canada are required to obtain their visa at the Israel Consular Office in Canada or abroad before leaving for Israel.

But, on the Jaffa hockey field, Victor came into his own. We had great difficulty in getting up a team at all, there were so few British staff stationed at Jaffa in those days. Our opponents were either the British police or an Army team: both made rings round us. It would have been even worse without Victor. Not only could he always be depended on to turn out — he had a terrific sense of responsibility and team work — but he was a superb goal-keeper. At his age, he could hardly have played in any other position. Being very stout, he filled up much of the goal-mouth, anyway.

He always arrived on the sandy, uneven field — out among the sweet smelling orange groves — impeccably dressed, with dark blue flannel shorts, colored tops to his stockings and the same colors on his sweater, his blazer and his scarf. Victor bought all his clothes in London on his biennial leaves: but I never could discover to what club the colors belonged. It couldn't have been the Jews' Free School: they didn't play hockey in those days. "The club I used to play for in London" was all that Victor would reveal. It's my belief that they were his own invention.

Keen as Victor was on the hockey field, he was even keener in his office. His punctuality — in a land of extreme unpunctuality — was proverbial. His efficiency was outstanding: he read all those journals of office-management long before they became fashionable. He introduced one gadget after another, starting with adding machines and ending with the first electric typewriter ever to be seen in Palestine. Whereas all the others of us had only a personal typist, he got the Treasury to include in his estimates a Secretary, again a first in the history of the Palestine Administration.

As a professional accountant, he was far ahead of everyone else. He had taken several London examinations of an advanced standard and put "MICA" as well as "FBSA" after his name. But, if you were unwise enough to get him started on any topic of accountancy, you were in for half an hour's monologue. Victor, on his profession — like all the rest of us — was apt to become an enthusiastic bore. He showed little interest in anything outside the twin towns of Jaffa and Tel Aviv. His work gave him complete satisfaction.

In later years I saw little of Victor. I went off to Galilee as Assistant District Commissioner: Victor never moved out of Tel Aviv during his whole career. "I'm a head-office man," he would proudly maintain. In World War II, I was back in Jerusalem; but what with petrol-rationing and no private cars, it was difficult for me to get to Jaffa, and I again saw little of Victor. Jerusalem was then full of war-time controls — foreign exchange, heavy industry, light industry, food, and so on.

Victor did his war service as head of the Jaffa-Tel Aviv light-industry office. Most of Palestine's light industry was concentrated in and around Tel Aviv and it had considerable military importance. The allocation of raw materials to all those factories made Victor a very busy — and a very influential — man.

For Palestine, World War II was a period of complete internal calm, broken only when it was clear that Italy and then Germany would be defeated. Once this was assured, both Jews and Arabs began to use forces against each other and against the Palestine Government — Jews to overthrow the White Paper policy of limited immigration and land purchase; Arabs to maintain it. The whole country rapidly got out of hand.

The Canadian Jewish Review is one of only 35 Audit Bureau of Circulations magazines in Canada. It gives wide, city-to-city coverage for your advertising message, and reaches a select consumer audience. The Canadian Jewish Review is received every Friday in the mail, and is read by the family groups which gather together for the Sabbath observance on Friday nights. Every issue is a guide to planning and purchasing, through each week. Items of interest to women, as well as to the family in general appear in every issue. It is a community record; it is informative about the trends in Jewish thought, and the important Jewish world news of the day. The Canadian Jewish Review reaches the able-to-buy homes, with high-ranking purchasing power, where quality and prestige of goods and services are of paramount importance.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada, printed in any language, reaching the Jewish community which is not identified by a group or organization and which has the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

A Scroll Will Memorialize The Six Million Lost

BY DR. ISAAC SCHWARZBART, OF NEW YORK, DIRECTOR OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS DEPARTMENT OF ORGANIZATION

For many years now the World Jewish Congress, through its organization department, has been emphasizing and urging commemoration of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising in the countries where we have affiliates or cooperating communities. This is entirely in accordance with the resolutions of WJC Plenary Assemblies. Year after year we have sparked the flame of remembrance by appeals to entire Jewish communities, to cultural, social, religious, and youth groups to inspire their members and constituent bodies so that the destruction of six million of our people, as well as the heroic resistance of the Warsaw Ghetto, shall not only be reverently remembered but shall serve as an incentive to rebuild, as far as possible, the tragic losses suffered by the Jewish people during World War II.

It would be unfair to suggest that we alone have sought to arouse Jewry year after year. But it is no exaggeration to state that the World Jewish Congress has been the driving force in alerting the Jewish people to the responsibilities arising from that disastrous era.

Each year, once the memorial services have been solemnly concluded, we have asked our affiliates and our offices all over the world to tell us the details of community by community observance. Each year we have studied those reports, assessed their meaning, and then set them down together so that, in the succeeding year, they might serve as a guide and an added inspiration to Jews wherever they are. I know that, by and large, they inspired me and my colleagues in the World Jewish Congress. They offered conclusive proof that, despite the pressing problems of the present, despite a natural tendency to concentrate on the future, the past, the tragic, tear-stained past will never be erased from Jewish memory.

Let me give just one example. The Jewish community of Barbados consists of about a dozen families. But, last year, that tiny community closed its stores and offices at 3 P.M. and went to the synagogue to witness the lighting of six candles, to hear a recorded dramatization of the Ghetto's end, to hear the sad intonation of El Mole Rachamim. Then they went home and they wrote to the World Jewish Congress: "There is no doubt that this anniversary will continue to be observed by our generation with increasing reverence and deep emotion." Unwittingly, perhaps, the Jews of Barbados cast a searching beam into the future. I share their confidence that the present generation will never forget its 6,000,000 casualties, its ghetto warriors, but what of the future?

There is indeed a growing documentation of the slaughter and of active Jewish resistance. The picture of those blood-stained years becomes clearer and clearer as we force ourselves to read such monstrous memoirs as those of Auschwitz Commandant Rudolf Hoess who admitted responsibility for the murder by gas and gun of 2,000,000 men, women, and children. There are other works, dealing with the same dreadful happenings but proving the tremendous, indomitable spirit of those hapless victims of mass torture.

With all this documentation, we are faced, more and more, with the question of how to ensure that future generations shall preserve the memory of the catastrophe, of its martyrs, and its heroes. A partial answer to this question has been provided by Nathan Rapoport's massive monument erected on the site of the building that had once housed the central command post of the Warsaw Ghetto fighters. The thirty-six-feet high monument is, ironically enough, fashioned from Swedish granite with which Hitler had hoped to immortalize his expected victory and his planned, Jew-free empire. Just as Warsaw has its monument, I hope that in Jewish houses of prayer, in Jewish schools, and institutions everywhere there will be special plaques dedicated to the memory of the 6,000,000.

But even that is not enough. For years I have cherished the idea of a megillah, not a long, over-detailed document, but a brief, poignant reminder of that grimmest page in our history, lightened only by the momentary flicker of the torch of resistance. It is an idea that has now been discussed with several of the great scholars in Jewry and, very recently, I conveyed my thoughts to Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, of Israel. The response was, as might be expected, immediate and thoughtful. He directed my suggestion to the appropriate authority in Israel: Yad Vashem.

I am happy to say that within the very near future, the poets and writers of present-day Jewry will be invited to participate in a contest to provide a Megillah of the Churban. Far, far into the future, we shall thus have assured the reading of the story of the catastrophe and of the active resistance, with the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising as its peak, in Jewish homes, in Jewish schools, in Jewish institutions, in Jewish houses of prayer. It shall remind Jewry never to forget; it shall inspire them to build Jewish content into their communities in an effort to make good, in some measure, the terrible loss we suffered at Hitler's hands.

500 Agadir Refugees Among 115,000 Got J. D. C. Passover Aid

Every one of the more than 500 Jewish survivors of the Agadir earthquake, now sheltered in Casablanca and other Moroccan communities, received a special financial grant for Passover from the Joint Distribution Committee, it was reported by Edward M. M. Warburg, JDC chairman. Special holiday assistance from JDC enabled more than 115,000 men, women, and children in 17 countries to observe Passover this year, Mr. Warburg added. Funds for this assistance, as well as other aspects of JDC's overseas relief and rehabilitation programs, are provided chiefly by the United Jewish Appeal.

The JDC chairman indicated that in the main the Passover assistance took the form of providing matzoth, wine, and other foods necessary for the observance of the festival. Purchase and delivery of all the items took place more than two months ago in order to insure timely arrival. In addition to the aid given the Agadir survivors, similar provisions were made for some 175 Jews from the neighboring town of Inezgane, who have now returned to their own homes. The Inezgane refugees were visited by JDC officials before the holidays to make certain that all their immediate needs were being met. Mr. Warburg reported that approximately $20,000 had been provided to the Jewish survivors of the Agadir earthquake for Passover and other special grants.

Passover shipments this year included 157,816 pounds of matzoh; 35,790 pounds of matzoh meal; and more than 5,000 bottles of kosher wine. Supplies were delivered to Jewish communities in Albania, Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Yugoslavia, Greece, the Philippines, the Dominican Republic, and Haiti.

In Poland, where the agency assisted 22,000 people last year, JDC financed the baking of matzoh by the Community Council, and subsidized the distribution of matzoth to those who could not afford to pay. In those Moslem countries in which JDC operates, Jews use a different form of matzoh from those made in Western countries. JDC therefore made special Passover grants to Jews in those countries to enable them to purchase matzoth locally.

Israel Bonds Provide Economic Expansion

BY ABRAHAM FEINBERG, PRESIDENT OF THE ISRAEL BOND ORGANIZATION

For over 3,000 years, the deliverance of the Jewish people from slavery in Egypt and their return to the land of Israel have been recounted in the Passover observance. In our own day, the unraveled thread of Jewish history has been rewoven into the fabric of freedom of the "old-new" State of Israel. Until a little more than a decade ago, Passover served as an inspiring and hopeful echo of past achievements; today, it embraces the drama of reconstruction and development that is unfolding on the landscape of Israel.

The realization of the ancient promise of Passover has ushered in a new era of fulfillment in which the State of Israel is fructifying large areas of long-neglected land and is building industries and homes for the settlement and sustenance of hundreds of thousands of immigrant families. This present-day deliverance through development is the result of a modern covenant of practical faith expressed through the State of Israel Bond campaign.

In strengthening our link with Israel, the State of Israel Bond drive has also served as the instrument whereby we have helped to accelerate the strides that Israel has made from early days of austerity and crisis to economic growth and solid foundations for self-sufficiency.

This is perhaps a significant moment to take the measure of this unprecedented instrument of economic deliverance. From the inception of the Israel Bond drive in 1951 to the beginning of 1960, a total of $424,126,450 in Israel Bonds was purchased by more than 1,000,000 investors. During 1960, which is the tenth year of the Bond drive, it is hoped to sell $75,873,550 in Israel Bonds, which would bring the total of Israel Bonds to $500,000,000 for the ten-year period.

Through our efforts in the 1960 Israel Bond campaign for Israel's progress, we will be providing the economic resources for expansion of agriculture, establishment of new industries, building of permanent housing, construction of pipelines, roads and electric power installations, and wider exploration and processing of minerals. After the Passover season, we can resolve to do our share in helping Israel to achieve a greater degree of development so that next Passover we may be able to celebrate newer milestones in the living history of Israel.
